The human major histocompatibility complex (MHC) comprises highly polymorphic genes with key roles in immunity. Over the last 10 years, tremendous progress has been made in the molecular characterization of the MHC-encoded molecules. This review summarizes the current state of our knowledge regarding the structure, function, genetics, and evolution of these molecules, as well as the implications for our understanding of autoimmune and infectious diseases and for the development of MHC-based vaccines. Of computer programming and formal logic - kyloom ===== knd775 I've been toying with the concept of a formal-logic approach to a programming language for some time now. I've used a Scheme style approach to this in the past, but for a greater number of operators and more functionality, I've been toying with perhaps a LISP style approach. It would certainly be a very elegant solution to an algebraic programming problem, and it opens up some interesting questions about philosophy and mathematics. But, the issue of 'coding in the dark' can be a tough sell for someone new to programming. I would certainly want a "compiler" for this to give good error messages, and the idea of "functionality" is a bit mind-bending. Most novice programs do fairly mundane stuff. Does this kind 3da54e8ca3
