Habs suffer another injury scare It's another injury to the Canadiens, with Patrice Bergeron and Lars Eller suffering minor injuries at the Ottawa Senators' home opener, less than 24 hours after Mathieu Darche and PK Subban were hospitalized with what's being treated as an illness. Forward Max Lapierre, who is currently listed as day-to-day with a lower-body injury, also had a minor issue early in the game and will be reevaluated tomorrow, according to Canadiens general manager Marc Bergevin.In-Depth Profile Portrait by Alain Patrice Lumumba A Politico Magazine profile of the late Democratic Republic of Congo leader, who defied American media coverage to rise to power in the Congo's first free election. "Senegalese philosopher and activist Albert Ngabu, also known as Albert Lumbuta, explains that the roots of his name can be traced to one of the most contested events of the Congolese revolution of 1958. During a visit to the United States for the inauguration of Senegalese President Abdou Diouf, Ngabu was seated with President Dwight D. Eisenhower. When asked why he was at the White House, Ngabu pointed to his name and said, 'this is an Albert.'" Read the full story by Alex Cohen at Politico Magazine. COOPERATION REQUIRED BY AUSTRIAN REPUBLICANS: Germans resisted the popular ideas of European integration even before the creation of the European Union in 1992. In the view of many, the EU, with its single currency and political institutions, might eventually produce the same kind of power consolidation that was a by-product of German unification. This was interpreted by the Austrian chancellor Bruno

Home building has been a major turnaround story the last few years, with the housing sector contributing to the slowest economic recovery in the history of the country. Housing production, in fact, turned negative several years ago for the first time in the postwar era. Housing starts have been bumpy in recent months, and a brief correction is likely to be short-lived. But housing is poised for a big rebound in the second half of the year. The housing market is still down about 30 percent from its peak in 2006, and based on history it will take longer than that to get back to the same level of activity. But the U.S. economy is growing at a more healthy pace, and the relative attractiveness of housing should start to rebound by late this year. The most important factor driving the housing rebound this year will be tapering in government mortgage lending standards, which will allow people with a weaker credit rating to qualify for financing. That trend will reverse in early 2011 as the Federal Reserve starts to raise short-term interest rates. Historically, mortgage interest rates have risen about 1/2 percentage point for every half percentage point of Fed tightening. So the rise in short-term interest rates should slow the housing recovery down to a more normal pace as the Fed begins to taper its stimulus. Based on the improvement in the U.S. economy in recent quarters, the Fed is about to begin shrinking its stimulus. Based on average growth of 2.3 percent in the last two quarters, the Fed is already planning to raise interest rates by another 1/2 percentage point by the end of the year. The Fed is clearly fighting to keep interest rates low, partly to spur growth, but also because the Fed expects inflation to pick up further in 2010. I expect the pace of the housing recovery to slow down sharply as the Fed 6d1f23a050
