What we do. get in the inner most secrets of the black box.Did your PS4 or Xbox One Go Up in Flames? Or crash from the inside? Is your DVD Player on the fritz? Now the PC has its own Gear Acquisition Syndrome, but we can cure it... Gear Acquisition Syndrome (GAS) is real. It's a mental state in which you see yourself lined up for a new piece of technology. The big screen TV looks good, but only that single 52 inch OLED from LG is set to rival a 120 inch one. Maybe you just saw 'Game of Thrones' in 3D on AMC and want to live an authentic Westerosi life. Maybe you want the same set for your Xbox One that the cool kids have already got. Or maybe you just want the same laptop you've had for the last decade. Each of these are microcosms of a global phenomenon. But the thing that really gets me is the issue that major PC players face. We have MS Office already, and we can Skype from our friends' PCs. Why do we need a dock for that? And the same goes for Skyrim. Oh and then there's Steam - that's another good one. Why do we need that launcher as well? These are the questions that haunt the greatest minds in tech. One team even put together a UI of what their ideal system would be, based on a series of simple UI interactions designed to filter through all the crap that actually makes up our PC setup. Blank Slate-like We've built this website to help you really see through the blanks that GAS puts on your PC setup. You might just surprise yourself.
