Features: Last but not least, Lightroom's new features and additions aren't just about what is seen on the screen. You can work smarter, too. Lightroom 5 offers powerful face recognition, facial expression-based retouching, a new HDR tool, auto smart object generation and much more. In addition, Lightroom 5's new content-aware fill feature now supports Photoshop, Photoshop Elements and Illustrator users. New enhancements also include a transparency mask tool, new simplified grid, a new video creator and a new integration with the cloud. For example, the new content-aware fill tool will intelligently fill in sections of a photo (such as people's faces). It lets you select the area you want, and the editing tool will suggest relevant fill colors, adjust colors in the surrounding area and finish by blending the fill color into the surrounding area. This feature was already available in Photoshop CC, but in Lightroom, you can achieve similar results while managing your edits in Lightroom. You can immediately see whether a suggested fill is suitable — no color adjustments required and the process is much faster than using the Photoshop CC version. Edge-aware fill is another similar feature that fills in areas that may be missing in your image, such as the edges of people's faces or other skin textures. The new HDR tool automatically creates a high dynamic range, or HDR, image from any number of images or raw files. You can choose from nine level settings to create any effect from subtle to extreme. This tool, combined with an improved Quick Fix feature, makes editing and enhancing dark and underexposed images more of a snap.
